Objective: The course aims to develop students' capacity for independent research, critical reading and academic writing through seminar discussions and student presentations. It seeks to strengthen analytical thinking, scholarly communication and the ability to engage with IKS themes using appropriate theoretical and methodological frameworks.

After completing this seminar-based paper, the learners will be able to:

1. Identify and formulate a research problem and develop a coherent seminar paper using relevant academic literature and sources.
2. Critically analyse and synthesise scholarly arguments and theoretical perspectives related to the chosen theme.
3. Present research findings effectively through structured oral presentations and participate meaningfully in academic discussions and peer feedback.
4. Demonstrate academic writing and referencing skills, and produce a well-structured seminar paper following accepted scholarly standards.
